USPA NEWS - Qaisar Sheikh Pakistan's Saint Politician Brings World-Class Education to his Constituents in Chiniot Pakistan

Qaisar Sheikh, widely known in his constituency as the “saint politician” of Pakistan, is being praised for bringing world-class educational institutions and expanded welfare initiatives to the people of Chiniot, Pakistan reinforcing his long-standing reputation as a philanthropist, patriot and committed public servant.

It is often said that many politicians enter public life driven by personal ambition, financial security or self-glory. However, Qaisar Sheikh’s journey into politics is inspired by the teachings of Prophet Muhammad (?) to serve the weak and underprivileged, and the political vision of Quaid-E-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah to build a strong, prosperous and self-reliant Pakistan, said Shazada Hayat, President of UICF (UK) and an international community welfare campaigner.

Qaiser Sheikh is a politician of conscience and a faithful patriot who has adhered throughout his life to four uncompromising principles: devotion to Islam, the supreme national interest and security of Pakistan, and the welfare of the Pakistani public. Qaiser Sheikh also has a profound allegiance for Pakistan’s armed forces the Army, Navy and Air Force, which he regards as the nation’s greatest defenders and most honoured institution of Pakistan.

Currently serving as Pakistan’s Federal Minister for Investment, Qaisar Sheikh hails from one of the most prominent business dynasties of Chiniot. A seasoned politician and accomplished economist, he has successfully expanded his family’s business empire into one of Asia’s strongest enterprises, providing livelihoods to thousands of employees who support their families through its operations. The Sheikh family has historically been counted among Pakistan’s largest taxpayers, a tradition that continues today under his stewardship.

Shazada Hayat went on to say, In the political arena, Qaisar Sheikh is regarded as a rare figure. Whether contesting parliamentary elections as an independent candidate or representing a political party, he has consistently emerged victorious. Observers attribute this to his emphasis on national interest and public welfare above party politics. During visits to his constituency in Chiniot, he receives what supporters describe as a hero’s welcome, which is organic, heartfelt and unmanufactured reflecting his standing among the people.

Healthcare and education have been the primary focus of Qaiser Sheikh’s philanthropic efforts. Using substantial amounts of his personal family wealth, he has established medical camps across rural areas of Chiniot, providing free consultations, treatment and medicines to poor and underprivileged residents. In addition, he has donated significant funds to cover school fees for children whose families cannot afford education, ensuring that financial hardship does not deprive them of opportunity said Shazada Hayat.

In a landmark development last month, the Federal Minister inaugurated the Chiniot campus of Government College University Faisalabad, marking what many see as a transformative moment for higher education in the region. Alongside this, the establishment of the Chiniot campus of National University of Computer and Emerging Sciences has been hailed as a pioneering achievement. Supporters claim these institutions rank among the finest in Asia and compare favourably with universities in the United Kingdom and Europe, offering students in Chiniot access to world-class facilities and academic excellence close to home.

Each year on August 14, Pakistan’s Independence Day, Qaiser Sheikh continues a distinctive tradition in his constituency. To celebrate the creation of Pakistan, he distributes free petrol and diesel tokens to owners of motorbikes and small vehicles, enabling families to commemorate the occasion with pride and joy. The gesture, while symbolic, is seen by supporters as reflective of his desire to share national celebrations with ordinary citizens.

In public addresses, Qaisar Sheikh frequently speaks about economic development and national responsibility. He has often referenced China’s rapid progress, stating that decades ago China sought advice and examples from Pakistan’s development model.

Qaiser Sheikh personally interacted with visiting Chinese delegations and travelled to China multiple times, offering counsel on economic success, public health and education. He urges audiences to reflect on China's transformation and to consider where Pakistan stands today in terms of economic growth. Qaiser Sheikh said China has surged ahead of Pakistan and the blame and responsibility must be shared by various and successive political leaderships for Pakistan's progress.

Qaiser Sheikh described the historic victory in May 2025 war with India as one of the greatest achievements since Pakistan's creation, praising the leadership of Field Marshal Asim Munir and the Pakistan Armed Forces.
He states that the victory elevated Pakistan's national pride and global image to unprecedented heights and calls the month of May 2025 historic and defining; one that future generations will commemorate with patriotism.

Despite his high office and business stature, Qaisar Sheikh continues to portray himself as a servant of the people and an advocate for unity. He appeals to politicians, public and private institutions, and citizens alike to work together in the national interest. "Pakistan needs us and we need Pakistan," he has declared in public gatherings, urging collective effort to restore the nation's standing on the world stage.

Supporters describe him as a rare breed in modern politics, a leader who sees Prophet Muhammad (?) as his spiritual guiding force and Quaid-E-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah as his political inspiration.
Qaisar Sheikh is a true patriotic son of Pakistan and a guardian of the poor and destitute. Through philanthropy, education initiatives and national advocacy, Qaiser Sheikh continues to cultivate an image of principled leadership grounded in faith, patriotism and public service. Qaiser Sheikh is truly a great national asset and a true patriotic son of his motherland Pakistan,
